

Extreme swinging

Pickle loves to swing. Especially very fast. It's hard to keep holding on to the swing then, but Pickle is very good at it. To do this he grabs the swing with one paw while his other paw and beak is holding on to the side of his home. Then he places his other paw on the swing and holds it tight. And then... then he lets go of the side of his home. Swings swing. Bam, bang, goes the swing against the side of his home. "Wee", goes Pickle, holding on tight. Then now for a trick. Pickle lets himself drop forward and now he is swing upside down. "Yippee" goes Pickle, but he isn't done with the tricks yet.

Pickle lets go of one paw. This makes him swing a bit in a circle. With only one paw holding him tight. "This is amazing!" chirps Pickle happily. He wonders if he can make it even more extreme as he climbs back to sit in the swing normally. An idea enters his mind and he grabs hold of the side of his home once more. This time he doesn't grab the swing with his paw, but with his beak. And then let's go. He's only holding on to the swing with his beak! He swings and swings, but holding on with your beak is much harder than a foot. He loses his grip and quickly opens his wings to soften the land. Now that was some extreme swinging.
